

Subashiri Trail

Standard time required Up: 6.5 hours, Down: 3 hours

Distance Up: 7.8 km, Down: 6.2 km

Subashiri fifth Station (2000 m) ▶ ▶ Kusushi Shrine (3720m)

The course allows you to enjoy greenery and alpine plants of the forest. For descending, you dynamically go down the "sand run."

The Subashiri Trail is popular for the sand run, where you dynamically go down a steep slope. You approach the trail from the east side of Mount Fuji. As the altitude of the fifth station is lower than that of the Yoshida Trail by approximately 300 m, you naturally need to take longer. Also, as there are fewer huts and you can enjoy climbing in a comparatively quiet atmosphere, the trail is popular for those who have experience climbing and for repeat climbers. Walking in the forest continuing from the entrance, alpine flowers blooming at your feet will please the eyes. The trail is very rich in nature up to around the altitude of 2,700 m. You can't rest as often as on the Yoshida Trail because there are fewer huts, so it's better to prepare drinking water and portable foods in advance.

This trail meets the Yoshida Trail at the old eighth station, after which you take the same route as the Yoshida Trail climbers up to the summit. For descending, take the same route as the Yoshida Trail until the eighth station, but use a separate trail from the Shita-edoya hut. From the seventh station, enjoy the dynamic sand run where you go straight down the sand slope. We recommend preparing a mask and sunglasses to avoid the clouds of dust.
